Twelve Escape Car-Train Crash

Twelve occupants of a car driven by Luther Thomas Hix, Appomattox, escaped injury in a fiery early Sunday morning when a east bound Norfolk and Western train struck the car at Moses crossing", just west of Appomattox.

The right front and rear wheels of Hix's auto evidently slipped off the crossing and became wedged in between the train tracks. Hix and occupants of the Jenkins family who live nearby were on their way to the Jenkins home for a 12:30 a.m. feast. They left the car, then looked on as the east bound freight struck the rear of the vehicle. The car lights were still burning and following the impact Hix said, "I could see the car off the track, and it ran on its own power."

Trooper E. L. Jones investigated. According to one witness two trains were being held up. The 12:45 east bound was riding the alternate track, having been told by crewe switchmen that there was something across the tracks.

The west bound freight was also delayed because of the accident.
